Amazon has various programs and services that influencers can promote within their virtual store. Influencers will earn a varying amount for each customer they attract to these programs/services. This money is referred to as bounties. One example of a bounty is if an influencer manages to get his/her followers to sign up to an Amazon Business account. In this case, Amazon gives a bounty of $US15 to the influencer.

One thing Amazon has learned from its Affiliate Program is the ability to track sales easily. It can tell when somebody has come to Amazon via your store and made a purchase. When that customer buys something, Amazon will give you a payment at the agreed rate.

You can keep track of all your sales commissions/bounties on a reporting tab within your Amazon store. It includes full details of your sales, bounties, payments, fees, and any transaction information.

How Successful is the Amazon Influencer Program?

There may be issues when influencers also have arrangements with other brands. They will need to consider how they deal with their other sponsors' products in their Amazon store. Do they include that product there? Do they show competing products? There may be a need for negotiation between an influencer and his/her sponsors when there is an Amazon Storefront.

These products appear in influencers' stores at no cost to the brands. They effectively benefit from influencer marketing without having to take on the influencers directly. Amazon covers the marketing costs. The program provides a way for creators of knowledge products, in particular, to gain passive income without doing any extra work.
